Korea Fighting Covid-19

After the initial outbreak of a new Corona Virus in Wuhan became known to the world, the disease caused by that virus, Covid-19, spread rapidly internationally. Countries in Asia were the first who had to deal with what quickly evolved into a pandemic and they devised different strategies to contain the virus. The strategies themselves and their successes depended on several conditions including available medical and financial resources, the effectiveness of governments, cultural factors which made certain policies more or less acceptable, and community willingness to make economic sacrifices. While it was the same virus which hit each country, the success or failure of containment strategies, and the resulting consequences of these and the virus itself differed from country to country.

In this online seminar, EL Eunyoung Lee, Partner at Excolo, a Singapore based international development consulting firm that is a partner of the Coalition of Epidemic Preparedness Innovation (CEPI), will assess the containment strategy in Korea and the expected short-, medium- and long-term consequences of the pandemic in the country.
